

THE NEW PLAYS
"The Charm School"
Novel and Amusing
By CHARLES DARNTON

That strange and wild young creature the flapper, who makes the "vamp" seem comparatively tame, romped into her own at the Bijou Theatre last night in "The Charm School," a refreshing comedy by Alice Duer Miller and Robert Milton.

By way of starting the sport, an automobile salesman fell heir to a hotel for girls and then fell for one of his pupils in record-breaking time, while all the other wildly romantic flappers adored him so industriously that their studies were sadly neglected. They strained toward him like young seals yearning for a poor fish; they gazed rapturously into his eyes; they sighed as Juliet never sighed; they declared him "beautiful," and—yes, you've guessed it—they likened him to a Greek god. In short, they had the time of their innocent young lives.

The audience had quite as good a time watching the fun. It began in the lodgings of a group of fellows who had a hard time getting along until they struck out on the path of higher education. In the belief of the erstwhile automobile agent, charm was of greater value to girls than anything else in the world, and he went in for teaching it regardless of consequences. Little Elsie instantly marked him as an easy victim. Every morsel she brought him gardenias. Then it occurred to her simple mind that she would make more rapid headway in English composition if she wrote him a nice little letter every day. He made a great show of sitting firmly in his chair, but anyone who half an eye could see he was slipping. To hasten his downfall she presently poured out her heart to him. Then she ran away from the school, and, of course, he chased after her. It was all over with him. The poor chap never had a chance of escape.

Novel and amusing, "The Charm School" delighted its audience for two acts. The last act was less lively, in fact, a bit slow. But the new idea and its clever treatment by the authors provided uncommon entertainment to which was added a pretty little song written by Jerome Kern and prettily sung by Marie Carroll. At the same time, it must be confessed that the charm acquired by the flapper they were after the course of education changed.

Marie Carroll gave girlish charm to Elsie, and Sam Hardy maintained his dignity with equal effect as the man with the big idea. A fine, sensitive performance of a timid, nervous secretary was given by Minnie Dupree, who not only realized the humorous possibilities of her role, but added a touch of real pathos to her scenes of farewell. Her portrayal was the work of an artist.

Margaret Dale acted with authority as the principal of the school, but dressed like the head of a dancing academy. James Gleason, Ivan Simpson, Rapley Holmes, Neil Martin, Morgan Forley and Dixie truly added amusingly in establishing "The Charm School" as an entertaining institution.

MEDICAL SCHOOL WILL BUY RADIUM
Post-Graduate Plans New Research Board to Study Malignant Diseases.

Following announcement yesterday of the plan for free use of the State's supply of radium for the treatment of malignant diseases at Buffalo came a statement from officials of the New York Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital that preliminary plans are being formulated for the establishment of a radium research board to study the cure and standardize the treatment of malignant diseases. With this end in view steps are being taken to buy one gram of radium, valued at approximately $150,000.

This, the officials say, will be the largest amount of radium in the world used for instructing graduate physicians and surgeons in the use of the substance as a therapeutic agency. As a nominal charge of only 10 cents is made at the hospital, treatment there is practically free. This includes treatment necessitating the use of radium.

They are the only spiced sardines on the market. You'll never know how good a sardine can taste until you've tried Tango Spiced Sardines.

No matter how you serve them—plain, grilled or toast, minced with mayonnaise or in any one of the scores of ways—Tangos are always delicious—always tender, full flavored and delicately spiced.
